A DESPERATE MAN

Kills Four Persons and Attempts to End His Own Life.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 26. John Craig shot and killed his father-in-law, William Hunter, his mother-in-law, Mary Hunter; George Hunter, his brother-in-law, and his wife, Emily Hunter Craig, last night. Craig drove to Glendale, five miles from this city, where his wife, from whom he was divorced three months ago, was stopping with her brother George, and deliberately shot and killed them both. He then returned to this city and went to the home of his father-in-law, William Hunter, and killed him, after which, stepping over the body he walked to the dining room where he shot and killed his mother-in-law. He then turned the pistol against his forehead and fired two shots both of which failed to kill him. He was taken to the police hospital and will recover. He states that he was hounded by his wife's relatives and wanted revenge, but was sorry he had not succeeded in killing himself to complete the whole business. Craig was prominent in politics. The killing grew out of troubles over the settlement of community property. Craig has borne the character of a desperate man and has few friends on account of his quarrelsome disposition.

Burning Vessel Sighted.

QUEENSTOWN, July 26. Steamer Germanic, which arrived here this morning, reports that on the day she left New York she passed in latitude 40 N, longitude 73 W, a bark which was on fire and evidently had been abandoned. The burning derelict hailed from Searsport, Maine, but her name had been burned off and her identity could not be established.

Further Intelligence.

NEW YORK, July 26. The burning bark which passed by the steamer Germanic as reported from Queenstown today was probably the Emma T. Crowell, oil-laden, which took fire July 18, south of Fire Island and burned to the water's edge.

FOR LUNCHEON.

Take a three pint mold or basin, and after greasing thoroughly with butter, fit in slices of bread the thickness of a silver dollar, from which the crusts have been removed, having first, however, dipped them in melted butter and dredged them in sugar. MUST BEG OR STARVE.

Sad Condition of the Commonwealers in Maryland.

Coxey Tells Them He Has Done All He Could.

And That Hereafter Must Secure Their Own Food.

HYATTSVILLE, Md., July 26. Nothing remains in the commissary of the commonwealers but a few pickles and the men have had nothing to eat for two days but berries. They are suffering greatly and another day or two without substantial food will force them to beg or fight for subsistence. Five Coxeyites were committed to the house of correction yesterday. Being without visible means of support the justice held that they came under the vagrant law of the State. General Coxey paid a flying visit to Camp Lost Liberty, near Highland, yesterday. He spoke to his half starved followers, telling them that the outlook was very discouraging and that hereafter the men would have to secure food as best they could.

He said he had done all for them he could and he had not received enough money to pay his railroad expenses while soliciting contributions. People all over the country had promised aid but as soon as he got out of the trains in which he had spoken he had been forgotten. He left for Massillon, Ohio, and the men do not believe he will ever return. Jesse Coxey, his son, who has been in charge for some weeks, has also gone to Massillon.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Lively Row in Chamber of Deputies.

PARIS, July 26. Joseph Jourdan, Socialist deputy, precipitated a new disturbance a few moments after the dispute between Deschanel and Jaures in the Chamber of Deputies last night. He asked Deschanel if he had not been willing to enter the Rouvier cabinet. Rouvier, who had been excited almost to frenzy by the allusion to his part in the Panama scandal, did not give Deschanel a chance to reply, but roared at M. Jourdan, "Remember who you are, M. Deschanel; I was a politician when you were earning a living in any way you could get it."

Jourdan appealed to the President to protect him from "Such an unmerited attack from so low a quarter." The President called him to order.

Flinging up his hands, Jourdan replied, "This call to order, Mr. President, will weigh heavily upon you one of these days."

Rouvier followed Jourdan in the speaker's tribune. He clothed his defence in vehement language, often pointing to his accusers as he flung off an exceptionally bitter phrase and thus exciting more

Jeers and Taunts.

"M. Jourdan's remarks," he said, "had been entirely unparliamentary. They had revived poisonous slanders, which had been proved to be without a shadow of truth. At his trial he had been shown innocent of the scandalous charges of corruption which had been brought against him in the chamber. The great Gambetta and Jules Ferry had been accused of corruption even as unjustly (applause from the centre). He had been a loyal and faithful servant of the republic."

After reviewing his public life he again denied the truth of the insinuations against his honesty, and denounced M. Jourdan for comparing him with Wilson, the notorious son-in-law of President Grevy.

Immediately after adjournment the lobbies were filled with deputies discussing Jourdan's attack upon Rouvier. Jourdan was the centre of a heated group of socialists who held his hands and cheered him. Rouvier's friends surrounded him and kissed him repeatedly. There was a brief consultation which resulted in Rouvier's sending his seconds to the socialist deputy.

Endeavoring to Prevent the Duel.

PARIS, July 26. M. Burdean, President of the Chamber, has intervened to prevent the duel between M. Jourdan and ex-Minister Rouvier. He persuaded Jourdan to withdraw the insult which he gave during the debate last night and undoubtedly this will satisfy M. Rouvier.

The debate on the anti-anarchist bill will end in the Chamber to-day. The bill will go to the Senate in the evening and will be referred immediately to a committee. It will be debated on Friday.

Senators Floquet and Chesnolong will oppose it.

Russians Advice to the New British Ambassador.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 26. The St. Petersburg Gazette comments to-day on the haste with which Sir Frank Lascelles, the new British ambassador, assumed office after the Corean imbroglio took on threatening proportions. The editor says: "We hope that he will pursue the same peaceable policy as did Sir Robert Morier. It behooves him to use his best judgment and tact at the present moment to maintain and improve the friendly relations between Russia and Great Britain. The outcome of the present difficulties in Corea depends largely upon him and the Russian foreign office."

Sails for Penzance.

QUEENSTOWN, July 26. The Vigilant's gaff was repaired to the satisfaction of Capt. Haff before the yacht sailed for Penzance last evening. It is stated that the Vigilant's greatest defect is in her mainsail which must be altered or a new one procured before the working of the boat will be satisfactory to Mr. Gould and Capt. Haff. When this change is made the captain confidently expects to retrieve the Vigilant's lost laurels.

VIEWS OF MR. HAVEMEYER

On the Placing of 45 Per Cent. Ad Valorem Duty on Sugar.

NEW YORK, July 26. Mr. H. O. Havemeyer returned this morning after a few day's absence from the city. Referring to the proposed placing of 45 per cent. ad valorem duty on both refined and raw sugar, he says: There are at least fifty articles indispensable to, and used in the manufacture of sugar from the raw material. These articles under the proposed tariff bill are assessed from 25 to 75 per cent., the result of which is to increase the cost of the manufacture of sugar by more than one-eighth of a cent a pound and the differential allowed in the Senate bill is merely in the shape of a compensatory duty against the increase of cost of manufacture, as stated above.

Referring to the difference between the specific and ad valorem rates he says:

"It is impossible to adjust specific rates to an ad valorem system. It merely disguises the fact that many grades of raw are taxed disproportionately to the higher ones and is only advocated by those who make the higher grades. The ad valorem is the only just and equitable way of assessing duties and is neither in favor of nor against any grade of raw. Naturally the discrimination under a specific form of duty against any particular grade of sugar would place the American refiner at a disadvantage to his foreign competitors in that particular grade. Refined sugar is not a raw material and was never intended to come in free."

ALMOST A RIOT.

Collision Between a Railroad and Traction Company.

Singular Methods Taken for Retaliation.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 26. A railroad company and Traction company clashed this morning and there was almost a riot at the Main street crossing. The Traction Company is laying tracks for an electric road and the consolidated opposes the crossing of their tracks. The railroad commissioners recently granted the Traction Company permission, and laid down the regulations. This morning at daybreak the Street Railway Company began its work on the Main street and Fairfield avenue, west crossings. The railroad was taken by surprise and one track was laid across Main street before any opposition was made.

Superintendent Radel, of the Traction Company, demanded a right of way over the tracks and a car was run into the lowered gates. The traction called the police, and Capt. Birmingham with a squad of police arrived. The consolidated road men declined to move the train and the engineer and fireman of the freight were arrested and taken to the station.

At 6:30 a long freight rolled up and the engine stopped on the crossing. Then another train came on the other track, and the traction company men were obliged to stop.

About 9:30 there was nearly a riot. The engineer and firemen of the big Mogul opened the valve and steam was thrown all over the men at work close by. The traction men secured a hose and threw a stream into the cab, and the freight gang retaliated with big lumps of coal. Conductor Canfield then chopped

The Hose in Two.

United States Marshal Strong soon arrived on the scene and ordered the railroad men to allow the mail trains to proceed. There was no response to his orders and at 10:30 the mail train moved off the crossing. It was followed within ten minutes by another train which stopped directly in the path of the traction company's employes. The marshal also moved this and a third train followed, the 9 A. M. east bound out of New York, which also passed. Then a big force of men began tearing up the planking between the rails, but were only able to work on one track, the freight engine and its crew standing on the west bound track.

Soon afterward Attorney Bishop, who is also secretary of the consolidation, arrived with an injunction signed by Judge Hall of the Supreme court, restraining the traction company from crossing the tracks at all crossings and work was immediately stopped.

During the battle on the engine Patrolman Coley was kicked in the right cheek and severely bruised. The arrested men were charged with obstructing public travel, and were released under $35 bonds.

A director of the Traction Company said a motion for the dissolution of the injunction would be made at once, and the Traction Company may bring suit against the Consolidated for obstructing its right of way. There was no work done at the west crossing on Fairfield avenue, the movement to do work there being a bluff to draw attention from Main street. There is already a temporary injunction in force, restraining the company from crossing at Fairfield avenue near the depot.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Appointments Made by the Governor.

BOSTON, July 26. Gov. Greenhalge to-day appointed Messrs. George G. Crocker and Albert C. Burrage to be subway commissioners for the city of Boston. The appointments are in line with the adoption of the Meigs elevated railroad and in furtherance of the rapid transit movement. Mr. Crocker was until recently the chairman of the State board of railroad commissioners, and Mr. Burrage is counsel for the Brookline Gaslight Company.

The appointments were confirmed by the executive council under suspension of the rules. The appointment of Joseph E. Shaw, of Lynn, as deputy state fire marshal, was also confirmed.

Serious Burning Accident.

BROCKTON, Mass., July 26. Mrs. Walter Cooper of this place was seriously burned last night while trying to attach an oven to an oil stove. The flames were extinguished by neighbors and it is thought she will survive unless inflammation sets in. Mrs. Cooper is but nineteen years old and has been married but a short time.

WIND AND LIGHTNING

Destroys Much Property in Sections of New Hampshire.

DERRY DEPOT, N. H., July 26. Last evening wind and lightning destroyed a large number of fruit trees in this town and Londonderry. In the southern part of the town, near the Windham line, the road leading to Windham depot is filled with broken limbs and large trunks of trees. At Derry Depot a large tent was blown down. Reports from the surrounding towns are to the effect that the storm was the worst of the season.

Sailed for America.

QUEENSTOWN, July 26. James Corbett, the American pugilist, sailed for New York on the Majestic to-day.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at Ara Warren's Drug Store. Regular size 50c. and $1.00.

MANY RUMORS CURRENT

Regarding Further Fighting at Seoul.

Chinese Landing More Troops at Corea.

Great Britain's Warning to the Warring Governments.

LONDON, July 26. The Shanghai correspondent of the Central News says: Numerous rumors of further fighting at Seoul are current here, but none can be confirmed.

The Coreans continue to menace the Japanese of the Seoul garrison.

Intelligent native opinion here is that there will be an amicable settlement.

The Chinese arsenals and arms factories are busy day and night.

The officers of Chinese gunboats are filling the numerous vacancies on the vessels with seamen attracted by generous bounties.

There is a strong impression at the Japanese legation here that fighting is in progress in Corea, although no official notice to that effect has been received.

The officials at the Chinese legation say that their information indicates an improvement in the situation.

The Central News says: Great Britain has informed China and Japan that in case they infringe upon her interests she will take whatever steps she may deem necessary, but otherwise will not interfere in the present dispute.

Chinese Troops Land at Corea.

SHANGHAI, July 26. It is reported that 12,000 Chinese troops, who sailed on July 20th with eight war ships, have been landed in Corea. Foreign residents of Shanghai said that if this is true Japanese refrained from attack because they had become more amicable to the Pacific Counsel of the treaty powers.

RAILROAD MATTERS.

Increasing Their Facilities.

CHICAGO, July 26. The Stock Yards Company increased its number of engines to twenty-eight yesterday afternoon, the greatest number it has had since the strike began. Capt. O'Neil's force has been increased by twenty-five men from Desplaines street, Warren avenue and other stations. They will be sent into the packing district and distributed about the railroad yards. All of the roads have commenced night work and as yet no trouble is reported. Fully 2,000 men and boys who applied for work in the packing district were turned away yesterday.

Gov. Altgeld last night ordered the third brigade of Illinois militia from Chicago. This action was taken at the suggestion of Mayor Hopkins, who informed the Governor that the military force on duty in Chicago might be reduced safely.

Will Have to Find Work Elsewhere.

BLOOMINGTON, Ills., July 26. The Chicago and Alton people are letting their trainmen go in large numbers on account of the part which the men took in the strike. It is believed that every man at all prominent in the strike will ultimately have to find work elsewhere. Some have been discharged who took no part whatever in the strike, but who did not report for duty as usual.

Seeking Information.

CHICAGO, July 26. Assistant Adjutant General Hugh Bayle and Colonel Neumister, of the Governor's staff, went down to Pullman last night to get information regarding the situation. They had a long conference with Col. Turner and will make further investigations today with a view to determining when the situation may be considered safe enough to withdraw the troops. Mayor Hopkins was also at Hotel Florence talking with these officials. He said something would have to be done soon to bring things to a head.

"I had a talk with Vice President Wickes yesterday," continued the Mayor, "and told him I could not under existing circumstances, justify myself in keeping a regiment of men waiting to suppress riots when the shops were opened. Wickes said they were going to open, but I could not get him to say when. I am willing to let the troops stay another week but not till September or November. It is unjust to the members of the national guard and unfair to the State to hold them with nothing to do when the Pullman Company will not make a move towards resuming business."

OUR FISHING INTERESTS.

A Meeting of American and Canadian Representatives.

ALEXANDRIA BAY, N. Y., July 26. A meeting was held here last night between American and Canadian representatives to consider the recent action of the Canadian government in enforcing a tax on all American fishing in Canadian waters.

Mr. Strikler of New York opened the meeting. He said that the object was to arrive at some scheme whereby fair play for American as well as Canadian boatmen can be attained.

In response to the attitude of the question Mr. Dailey, a Canadian revenue officer said: We Canadians want to do the fair thing to all. The penalty of $5 for an American's permit to fish in Canadian waters was first affixed to the fishery regulations on the report reaching us that Americans were slaughtering fish in our waters. We don't want to injure American fishermen in any way and we appreciate the fact that many of our boatmen find employment in American waters.

A great many of our own boatmen are themselves opposed to this measure and in protection to them it might be advisable to modify this law.

Acting upon Mr. Dailey's suggestion, an American committee was appointed, consisting of Dr. Kennison, of Alexander Bay, N. Y., and Mr. Lampson, of Cleveland, to act with a committee from the Canadian boatmen and present the protest before the provincial government at Ottawa as soon as possible. The matter now rests with the Canadian government. Unless the stringent law is modified national lines here on the river will be very lightly drawn.

IN A DENSE FOG.

A British Steamer Has a Narrow Escape from Destruction.

PHILADELPHIA, July 26. The English steamship Beresford, which arrived here last night from Hamburg, narrowly escaped total destruction from a collision with an iceberg on the voyage across. About 4 A. M. on the 19th of the month, during a dense fog, in latitude 45.16; long. 48.10, the Beresford ran between two large bergs. When the ice was discovered the ship was in a channel not more than half a mile in width with two towering bergs on either side. The captain says that no indications of the icebergs' presence was given by any decrease in the temperature of either the air or water.

Shortly afterwards on the same day, in latitude 40.37; long. 80.80, a large derelict was sighted bottom up and just west of the wreck was that of a large sailing ship, about 70 feet of a coppered bottom showing above the surface of the water. The hull looked as if it had been recently abandoned, but what the rig or nationality of the vessel was could not be discovered.

TIPPECANOE CLUB.

Give Gov. McKinley a Reception—A Brief Speech That Has the True Ring.

CLEVELAND, O., July 26. At a reception to Gov. McKinley given by the Tippecanoe Club last night, General Alger, of Michigan, nominated Gov. McKinley for President in 1896. Governor Merriam, of Minnesota, also used McKinley's name in connection with the Presidential nomination. Governor McKinley in his speech said:

"The people of this country never wanted to vote as badly as they do now. The Democratic Executive and Congress has blighted everything in this country but the Republican party. Everything else has been interrupted or disturbed. The principles of the party were never so dear as they are to-day. I was asked to-day what the Democratic Congress would do with the tariff bill. I do not know, Senator Sherman don't know, President Cleveland don't know, heaven only knows."

MAINE MELANGE.

One of the Close Bell Buoys Works Satisfactorily.

Needs of a Daily Paper Well Demonstrated.

Cumberland.

An Auburn young lady had a series of narrow escapes of getting left on a trip from Auburn to Peaks Island the other day. She got aboard the train at the Maine Central station in Auburn after the train had started. At the Union station she succeeded in stopping a horse car which was due on the opposite side of the city in time to catch the Peaks Island boat. The car was a minute late, and they were taking in the gang plank when she reached the ticket office. The boat was filled with passengers, and there were many people on the wharf, but the Auburn young lady seemed to forget for the time being that four or five hundred men, women and children were looking at her. Her only thought was to get aboard. This she did by making a long run and a long jump from the wharf to the steamer's deck.

Knox.

Rockland Courier-Gazette: One of the Close bell buoys has been set in the harbor and works very satisfactorily indeed. It is the invention of Walter R. Close of Bangor who has for some time past been in our city. It is a very simple design but effective in its simplicity. Extending at right angles from the bell cap, which surmounts the buoy, are four hollow tubes filled with large metal balls, which at the slightest ripple of the waves strikes the bell with a very musical sound. It is certainly the best thing in buoys yet invented.

Sagadahoc.

The laying of water pipe across the Kennebec river from Nequasset to Bath is a job in which civil engineers as well as everybody else are interested. The Boston Society of Civil Engineers are to come down to Bath on a special excursion by steamer Kennebec for the purpose of witnessing the operation when it takes place. This will be some Saturday probably within two or three weeks. There are only three members of this society in Maine, those three being W. A. Allen of Portland, chief engineer of the Maine Central, George N. Fernald, of Portland, and O. B. Tripp, of Rockland. Mr. Tripp will witness the event and a number of other Rockland people probably will go over.

York.

One farmer over in Sanford has demonstrated the need of the daily paper at the farmhouse. When beef went up he didn't know it, and sold a pair of cattle for $260, the buyer selling them in the Brighton market for $500.

In the Saco court, Wednesday, Benjamin Whitney, of Biddeford, was bound over to the grand jury on the charge of entering Mrs. Charles Blake's house at Saco, and stealing a watch belonging to Raymond Sickra, her boarder.

NO MYSTERY AT ALL.

IN FACT, THE GOLD-FISH DID SPILL THE WATER.

If you put a gold-fish in a vessel filled to the brim with water, why won't the water overflow?

This question was once discussed at length by a learned society. One day a plain, practical man made the experiment. He found of course, that the fish, like any other body, displaced its weight in water. Thus we see the danger of jumping at conclusions. It has been thought that a man who takes much open-air exercise must eat meat and other solid foods. But what if his stomach rebels against them?

James C. Collin, of Syracuse, N.Y., suffered agonies with indigestion and lost flesh fast. Read what he says: "In justice to Paskola I will say that I average about five miles of walking daily (Sundays excepted) and eat no meat or fish of any kind, because I do not crave them. Paskola is indeed a food and a royal one too. I take pleasure in recommending it to my friends."

In less than a month, while using Paskola, Mr. Collin gained 6½ pounds. Beside nourishing the body itself, Paskola assists in the digestion of other foods.

J. Calvin Burnard, of London, N.H., says: "I began taking Paskola January 1, 1894. I had been sick seven or eight weeks and was so low as to be unable to be weighed, could not turn myself in bed alone.

"My friends and the doctor thought I must go down. The first dose of Paskola gave me a little appetite and I began to revive. My strength increased so that in a week from the time I took Paskola, I weighed 81 pounds and the next week I weighed 88 pounds; while in five weeks from the first I have gained 20 pounds.

"I feel encouraged. I am yet weak, but my strength is increasing every day. My general weight is 140 to 150 pounds. I verily believe that, with the help of the good Lord, Paskola has done a wonderful work for me. For years I have suffered so much with indigestion and constipation. I have doctored and taken this and that, but of no avail."

A pamphlet telling just what Paskola is, will be sent free on application to

Inconsistent with Honor

Some of the cuckoo editors who feel impelled to come to the defense of the President no matter what he may do or have undone seek to defend him from the charge of duplicity on the ground that he said nothing of a definite character and that the people care nothing about any more impressions the Senators may have received after reported interviews If this statement of the case were true it would not in very complimentary to the Presidents stand as with the element of force in the consideration of great public questions, to say that after all this time it has been impossible to tell from any definite record of his whether he was for or against the compromise bill But as a matter of fact we have the testimony of Senator Jones of Arkansas to the effect that after a long interview with the President in which the Senate amendments were freely discussed as the only basis of the problem the President said

I will say and do anything to pass this bill through Congress

That certainly would be regarded as sufficiently definite to satisfy not only any reasonable man that the President was in sympathy with the compromise movement as the best thing possible under the circumstances One paper in defending his course says But even if he once knew it his sanction, he is entitled to credit for changing his mind and repudiating it at last After the conference had been ordered and Mr Cleveland's letter denouncing as party perfidy the Senate amendments making coal and iron free dutiable was safe stored away in Mr Wilson's inside pocket Mr Jones and Mr Harris both talked with Mr Cleveland about the prospects of an agreement and both came away from the White House satisfied that the President was fully prepared to accept and sign a Senate bill if no more favorable one could be obtained That free iron ore and free coal were to be demanded by every Democratic Senator and bids for all features of any Democratic tariff bill were never even suspected by Mr Jones and Harris after their talk with Mr Cleveland and are flinging Mr Jones testimony although coal and iron ore were mentioned in every conversation he had with the President but he said after the conference had been ordered not one did the President announce that the retention of the coal duties on coal and iron ore would be in no constitute a violation of party principle would expose the opponents of these amendments to the charge of party perfidy and party dishonor

However creditable it may have been to the President to change his mind even at the eleventh hour it will hardly be contended that it was consistent with his honor as a man to permit the Senators to exhibit the belief founded on these reported interviews that he would approve the compromise bill, several days after he had written his letter to Chairman Wilson repudiating it The fact is that Cleveland has been rolled up by the members of his own party as is the proverbial trickster to use an expression applied to him some years ago by the New York Sun and which was never more true as it is to-day The exposure is complete and squirm as he may the President or his friends cannot get away from the damaging testimony of his shameless duplicity

Kill the Bill and Save the Country

An expression said to have been telegraphed to Senator Cullom by one of his Illinois constituents would make an excellent motto for the Republicans in Congress at the present time It is reported that Senator Cullom received a despatch asking him to come to Chicago to look after some question pertaining to his Senatorial interests and that he replied that he could not leave Washington as there was a prospect of killing the tariff bill The following answer flashed back "Stay with it Kill the bill and save the country"

The enactment into law of either one of the Democratic tariff bills means serious disaster to the business of the country which has already suffered to an alarming extent by reason of Democratic folly The way to end this is to kill all tariff legislation The Democrats are fighting among themselves and in this condition may rest the opportunity of the opponents of this destructive legislation The Democratic margin in the Senate is very narrow and with their forces divided it may be possible for the Republicans to prevent the final passage of the Senate bill, which appears to be the form the tariff legislation must take if anything in that direction is accomplished Kill the bill and save the country

Judged by His Record.

Now that the President has been placed in an unpleasant position by the recent speech of Senator Gorman, an effort is made to counteract the damaging statements by insisting that the word of a tricky politician like Gorman does not count against "the rugged honesty" of Cleveland Heretofore Mr Gorman's word and methods have had great weight in the councils of the Democratic Party, some members of which profess to have discovered all at once that he is not a man to be trusted, but that is not to the point. What we desire to know is when and where the President has given evidence of this alleged "rugged honesty." Certainly his defenders will have no little difficulty in finding any trace of it in his public record.

His "rugged honesty" did not deter him from using his Secretary of the Treasury as a mere scape-goat during the financial panic, when he humiliated Mr. Carlisle in order to protect himself from merited censure. In fact he has invariably stood ready to sacrifice principle for personal ends. In this connection the New York Tribune says: It cannot be forgotten, moreover, that certain incidents in the President's career, since the close of that obnoxious period to which Senator Gorman referred, render the concurrent testimony produced in the Senate on Monday somewhat less astonishing than it would otherwise be. It appears, for example, from Senator Gorman's candid revelation of party counsels that Mr. Cleveland, while posing before the country as the unflinching champion of advanced Tariff Reform, has been in the habit of intriguing with Democratic leaders for a compromise platform on which he could be elected, and privately dickering with the representatives of powerful interests whom his public attitude had alarmed

It will be remembered also that when, on the eve of the election in 1892, Mr Cleveland in the Lenox Lyceum lamented and denounced the collection and employment of huge corruption funds by his adversaries, he knew that Mr. Van Alen had bought the Italian mission or "something equally as good," with an enormous gift of money to the Democratic treasury

Again, the proclamation of the Hawaiian Republic vividly recalls the President's professions of good will to President Dole while he was clandestinely negotiating with Liliuokalani for the overthrow of the Provisional Government and at the same time trying to conceal his operations from the Congress and the people of the United States

And finally, bringing the record up to the date of his letter to Chairman Wilson, we find him endeavoring to shift on others the burden and reproach of an income tax, though he first, in a formal message had officially proposed that odious measure, and thereby forced the hand of a bewildered committee, we find him proposing still larger concessions to the most powerful and baneful of the trusts which he had arraigned as public enemies in his inaugural address, and we find him advocating on pretended public grounds the free admission of foreign coal, when the real purpose of that proposition is the enrichment of the Democratic syndicate which has leased the Nova Scotia mines

It may be wise on the whole, for the adherents of the President to attempt to belittle this latest indictment brought against him But it is folly to point to his record

Watterson's Advice

Col Henry Watterson sizes up the Democratic situation in the following vigorous fashion in the Louisville Courier Journal

The result we see in the formal disagreement reached by the two Houses After all the delay all the tergiversation all the scandal all the losses of position and prestige, we are just where we started with the President impelled to write a letter denouncing the traitors who have betrayed us in the Senate and recalling the House to its duty to the pledges to which its majority owe their existence and on which we won the last Presidential battle

It is too late The iron has entered into the soul of the people The fruit of a campaign of education extending over nearly two decades has been deliberately thrown away The work will all have to be done over again But with changed leaders The Democratic party will never again trust the false leaders who have turned it to its present discomfiture and disgrace

It is idle to speculate what might have been There was but one key to the situation and that was the Chicago platform

If our leaders had trusted to this and this alone they would have electrified the country forced the traitors to their individual accountability, and, having lost a battle that was destined to be lost, they could have adjourned Congress, appealed to a united party and elected with a roar on a rebuke and what was to us a surprise and comfort may flushed with victory is to-day a host without a leader vaunting banners in the wilderness of faction and disgust

Better let the whole nauseous affair go to grass get home and cool home, where the great number of you will find business of importance awaiting you

Mild Enthusiasm

The nomination of Mr A F Simpson as the Democratic candidate for Congress does not appear to arouse a great degree of enthusiasm in the Democratic office It somewhat feebly commends the city and county ticket but has nothing whatever to say about Mr Simpson It acts as though it were afraid that when he was nominated himself at Dover he had gained a point in the collectorship fight. When it remarks that "the Democrats are well satisfied with the nominations" on the county and city tickets it is evident that it has not made a close canvass on the subject Democrats who were not too much disgusted at the weakness of the tickets were laughing over many of the nominations as being in the nature of a joke Some of them do not hesitate to declare that they will not vote for the Populist attachment to the ticket The action of the Democratic convention in indorsing the nomination of the Populist candidate for County Commissioner lends additional interest to the following remark made by Prof Bateman, the Populist candidate for Governor

"I believe that the Democratic party in this State is dead from the hips down, and the cars up, and that we shall get the greater part of the rank and file We don't want the leaders at any price"

2 That process of subpoena may be issued directed to said Orono Savings Bank directing it on a certain day to appear and answer all and singular the premises

3 That such notice or notices, if any, as to the Court shall seem meet, may be ordered upon any and all parties interested

4 That a temporary injunction may be issued to the Trustees and Treasurer of said Orono Savings Bank, restraining said corporation and its officers from proceeding further with its business in whole or in part until a hearing can be had except that the Treasurer of said Bank may be permitted to collect and receive debts and interest due thereto

5 Your complainant prays for such further and other equitable relief as in law or equity he may be entitled to receive, and that all processes may issue which in the opinion of the Court are requisite for the safety of the public and the protection of all parties interested

VILAS DEFENDS.

He Sings the Praises of Grover Loudly.

On Every Point He Sees That Everything is All Right.

Mr. Hill's and Others' Propositions About Tariff Defeated.

An Interesting Day in the Senate in the Tariff Fight.

Senate

WASHINGTON, July 26 There was a very noticeable absence of flurry and excitement in and about the Senate chamber this morning as compared with the scenes of the last three days, and there was a corresponding falling off in the number of spectators in the galleries This was due doubtless to the general understanding that the day s proceeding were not likely to be of a very exciting character that the programme of the Democratic caucus would be carried out without any hitch and that the request of the House for further conference on the tariff bill would be complied with unconditionally

The tariff bill was not taken up till two o clock, the Democrats having agreed that the usual morning hour should be used in taking up business on the calendar and such other matters as should come before the Senate This is due to a request made by the Republican leaders in arranging the plan of campaign

Just at 2 o clock according to arrangement, the conference report on the tariff bill was called up and much to everybody s surprise Senator Quay withdrew the amendments he offered day before yesterday instructing the conferees with reference to the sugar schedule

Then Mr Gray suggested the absence of a quorum and a roll call was ordered

When the quorum appeared Mr. Vilas was recognized But Mr Vilas cheerfully consented to the interposition of a conference report and other routine business and the rumor began to be whispered about that there was a hitch about the arrangement to vote on the proposition to send the bill back to conference

When Mr Vilas did begin to speak he secured the immediate attention of his audience for his first words promised a sensation In utterances slowly and deliberately Mr Vilas said that an extraordinary scene took place in the Senate on Monday last A Senator of the United States of the same political party as the President had seen fit to attack him

Mr Vilas said he would attempt to speak with temperance and moderation What were the points of accusation in the remarkable assault to which he had alluded? he asked And, looking toward Mr Gorman's desk, he said he regretted that the Senator from Maryland was not in his seat The first was that the President was open to the charge of duplicity That accusation rested on the expressed urgency of the President in his letters that iron and coal should go untaxed in the tariff bill

The next accusation was that the President was guilty of encroachment on the powers of the legislative body and the third and last accusation was that the President had traduced the Senate of the United States What was there to show the truth of the accusations of the Senator from Maryland? There had been no direct testimony. Yesterday it was said by Mr Gorman or his witnesses that the President had acted with duplicity The Senator from Arkansas, (Mr Jones) one of Mr Gorman's witnesses, had said that he had laid the four hundred amendments to the tariff bill before the President and how the President was accused of having agreed to all of them

How could the President agree to all of these amendments? How many Senators could give a detailed account of these amendments and their effect on the business of the country? The President had merely considered these generally, devoting his attention and his remarks to the principle involved in free coal and free iron He (Mr Vilas) had asked the Senator from Arkansas if the President had not expressed to him the hope that free coal and free iron would be the outcome of this great question and the Senator from Arkansas had answered truly that on every occasion such was the fact

Who could say there had been a lack of openness on the President s part, or that he did not believe this bill before us in its perfection would care free coal and free iron ore? On this single statement of the Senator from Arkansas he would be content to let rest this charge of duplicity on the part of "that great officer of the government" The President had not endeavored to infringe upon the prerogatives of the Senate and had not acted with duplicity but with the same open manner that had always characterized him He had said to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that he hoped the result might be accomplished in conference with reference to free coal and iron, as he had a perfect right to do

Who would gainsay that the President had not as much right to give his views as freely on this question after his conversation with the Senator from Arkansas as he had before? Mr Vilas maintained that the President s letter was not an executive document It was a personal letter and the measure of its personal ity might be gudged by a consideration of its contents

During these remarks Mr Vilas became vehement In thunderous terms of accentuation he declared that the Senator from Maryland was apparently of the opinion that he had the right to direct the President, but that the President had no right to express his views

Was there not a righteous demand on the President of the United States that he should call the attention of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to the necessity of adhering to the House provision for free coal and iron in order to give effect to Democratic principles? Mr Gorman had quoted Washington's farewell address in his attack on Mr Cleveland, so, too, did Mr Vilas refer to Washington in support of his side of the argument and told how Washington had gone to the Senate of the United States in person with a treaty in his pocket to insist on its ratification

Mr Vilas then took up the third accusation, that the Senate had been traduced by the President in the Wilson letter Quotations from the letter formed the basis of an argument to show that the accusation was false The President had merely said that abandonment of free iron and free ore would be party perfidy and party dishonor Could it be said that the President was aiming at any particular Senator? He was only speaking to those who held his views Why so swift to take this accusation as personal? Was he (Mr Vilas) guilty of perfidy? Was any other Senator accused? Could that accusation be levelled at any Senator who agreed with the President? Much less could it be levelled at any Senator who did not agree with him, be he Democrat or Republican

As for the Senator from Maryland, he would not impute any motive to him for seeming to array the Senate against the House of Representatives. It was natural to seek to unite Democrats on the ground that they had been trampled upon, but not to do so in the belief that the distinguished man (Mr. Cleveland) had sought to attack somebody.

In conclusion Mr. Vilas said he would vote to carry the bill into conference and in order to carry that into effect he withdrew his motion offered on Friday last.

Mr. Stewart, Populist, of Nevada, followed Mr. Vilas with some remarks on the President's letter.

At 4 45 the President pro tem. announced that the question before the Senate was that of adopting two amendments of Senator Hill that the Senate recede from its amendments placing a duty on coal and iron ore. The motion was, at the suggestion of Mr. Allison (Rep. Ia.), divided so that the vote should first be taken on iron ore. The vote resulted yeas 6, nays 65, Messrs. Allen, Hansbrough, Hill, Irby, Kyle and Peffer voting in the affirmative.

Mr. Caffery withdrew his motion instructing the conferees on the sugar schedule to insist on a bounty for 1894.

Mr. Hill's motion with regard to coal was also lost, yeas 6, nays 64—the same Senators supporting the motion who had voted for the previous one.

The question recurring on Mr. Gray's motions to insist and to agree to a further conference, Mr. Washburn (Rep. Minn) moved to amend it by instructing the Senate conferees to recede from the 1-8 cent a pound differential duty in sugar (the same amendment which Mr Vilas had offered and had withdrawn)

Mr Mills, of Texas, made a point of order that the Senate could not recede from a part of an amendment already agreed to and could not therefore instruct its conferees to do so

Mr Hill argued against the point of order

Mr Gray said that it would be idle and absurd for the Senate to seek to limit the power of its parliamentary agents

Mr Mitchell, Republican, of Oregon, took the view that the motion must be in order as the effect of it would be to reduce the controverted points in issue

Mr Hale argued that it was in no way an abridgment of a full and free conference for either house to abandon one of the things in dispute.

Mr Gorman (Dem Md) argued that the Senate could not instruct the conferees at this time as there were no conferees

Without action on the point of order the Senate adjourned

House

Mr Hatch, of Missouri, moved that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from further consideration of the bill to prevent the adulteration of foods and drugs and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture

The Agricultural Committee claimed jurisdiction of the bill which had been referred by the House to the Committee on Commerce A vote by yeas and nays was made necessary by Mr Coombs, of New York, who demanded the yeas and nays and that a quorum should act on the proposition

Mr Hatch Democrat, of Missouri, moved that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill to prevent the adulteration of foods and drugs and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and the House by a vote of 126 to 76 declared that the bill rightfully belonged to the Committee on Agriculture

The House then proceeded in committee of the whole to consider measures reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce The first bill read was the House bill authorizing the superintendent of the life saving service to man and keep stations on the Atlantic and Gulf coast from August 1 to May 1 instead of from September 1 to June 1, as at present provided by law

With an amendment by Mr Sayers (Dem Tex.) which made the salary of surfmen at the stations kept open ten months $60 a month, instead of $65, as paid at the eight months' stations, the bill was passed. The following bills were also passed

Extending the privileges of the marine hospital service to employes of the life saving service

Appropriating $5 700 as a money testimonial to the surviving members of the party of the steamer Amsterdam and to those who are dependent upon the lost members, who went to the rescue of the wrecked American schooner Maggie L Wells last January They were sailors on the Amsterdam and lost their lives in their unsuccessful effort to save the fishermen on the Wells

To establish a lightship and fog signal about six miles east of Boston light, and to establish range range lights in Boston harbor, at a cost not exceeding $8 000 To amend the revised statutes, so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit penalties against sailing vessels as well as in the case of steam vessels

The conference report on the fortification and appropriation bill was presented and agreed to The bill carries a total appropriation of $2,117,000, being $109,600 less than as it passed the Senate and $202,350 more than as it passed the House and $216 939 more than the bill for the year ended June 30 1894 The House then adjourned

SUSPICIOUS CASE

Drunken Man Reports his Wife Murdered—Contradictory Stories

BOSTON July 26 John McManus, who lives at 91 Hudson street, came into the Lagrange street police station this afternoon and said that his wife, Margaret had been murdered McManus was evidently recovering from the effects of a debauch and the officer was inclined to think his brain affected McManus insisted however, and officers were sent to the house, where in a small front room on the third floor the dead body of Mrs. McManus was found with her throat cut from ear to ear, the cut evidently made with a razor, but no weapon was found on the premises

McManus said he came home at an early hour this afternoon and was unable to gain entrance to his apartments, the door being bolted or locked on the inside He started to go down stairs but stopped and listened and then he says he heard a man s voice and returned to the door and demanded admission All was silent as before and he then went to the police headquarters and reported that his wife was locked in her rooms with another man He was under the influence of liquor then and said nothing of his wife being dead The officers told him to go to the Lagrange street station, where he showed up shortly after noon and reported that his wife had been murdered. The other occupants of the house on Hudson street state that before leaving the house this morning McManus told several of them that his wife had been murdered

A little girl living down stairs in the Hudson street house says she heard a strange noise in the McManus apartments at 7 o clock this morning The room in which the body was found bears evidences of a struggle The dead woman was 40 years old and had four children

THE NICARAGUA CANAL

Feared that it May Pass into the Hands of England

WASHINGTON July 26 The friends of the Nicaragua canal bill in the House were somewhat exercised to-day at the information which reached Washington from New York that Messrs Bartlett and Weed, of the re-organization committee of the Nicaragua Canal Co , have sailed for Europe to consider the offer of certain English capitalists, who have agreed to furnish money to complete the canal

The bill which looks to governmental control of the canal is now on the House calendar It was unanimously reported by the Commerce Committee and it is the result of several weeks of careful consideration at the hands of a special committe to whom the work of drafting the bill was delegated

While the bill will, if it comes before the House, provoke some opposition and the discussion upon it may extend several days it is believed by the gentlemen having it in charge that it will pass by a good round majority The Committee on Rules, however, have declined to set aside a time for its consideration and the Speaker is reported as saying that he himself is unfavorable to the proposition The argument is made by the Speaker, it is said, that the condition of the national finances is such that the United States government cannot at this time assume the responsibility of guaranteeing the $70,000,000 of bonds necessary to construct the canal To this the friends of the bill reply that the bonds will not mature till 1925, 31 years hence

On the other hand the commercial, political and military advantages they say, which would result from governmental ownership of the canal can scarcely be over-estimated There is apparently no probability unless the session should be indefinitely prolonged that the bill can be considered at present and the fear is generally expressed by the members of the House Committee that during the interim the company may sell their concession to private parties in England, acting in realty for the British government, and that as a result of our inaction the canal will pass from our hands into the control of the English government

Bangors Take Kindly to the Fall Rivers Thursday

Visitors Bat Out of Turn and Game Was Given Bangors.

A Scene of Excitement at Park During Long Wrangle.

About 900 people gathered at Maplewood Park yesterday afternoon in anticipation of a fine ball game and lots of excitement They got both The latter was in rather a different form from that which was expected and was the result of a disgusting exhibition of kicking on the part of Capt Brady and Manager McDermott of the Fall Rivers But we will not anticipate events but will tell you briefly about the game

The Bangors were out for victory and fell upon the visitors and routed them horse, foot and dragoon In the first both sides went out one two three In the 2d Deady led off with a two bagger which inspired Hayes to follow his example and Deady scored McGlone got first on Riley s error but was caught in trying to steal second White made a single and Hayes scored Moore went out on a fly to Sheehan and Gray made a single

Then Sharrott got his base on balls advancing the others giving Slattery an opportunity to do great things He did them He gently tapped the sphere for a single and two more runs were scored and then Sharrott scored on Finnegan s error Fitzmaurice was third out on a fly to Sheehan Two 2 baggers and 3 singles was quite a bunch of hits for one inning The visitors went out in one two three order until the [illegible] Then with two men on bases and two men out Stevens made a single bringing in the two men

And then the trouble began

Hayes called Umpire Long s attention to the fact that Stevens had batted out of turn, Riley being the man to bat instead of Stevens according to the score card Long investigated the matter and promptly and correctly declared Stevens out making the third man out so the two runs did not count Then Capt Brady who can probably talk fast and less intelligibly than any man in America came in and immediately the air was full of Bradys

More eloquence was hurled at Long in a few moments than was ever before heard at the park and a few others took a hand Manager McDermott who had no business to enter the discussion raised his voice in denunciation and insulted everybody he could think of at the moment His actions were a disgrace to anybody but a barbarian who wouldn t be expected to know any better

The visitors claimed that they had made a change in their batting order and the score card was not right, but as the umpire cannot be expected to be a mind reader and has nothing to go by but the score card and again it is the place of the captain to inform the umpire in case of a change, Long persisted in his absolutely correct decision and ordered the game continued The Fall Rivers refused to play and after waiting the time prescribed in the rules Long gave the game to the Bangors 9 to 0 There was much excitement over the affair and afterward Manager McDermott vented his oratory in a crowd and tried to make trouble but he was ordered off the field by the police

As a result of their refusal to play the visitors did not receive their share of the gate receipts about $86 According to the rules in a case of that kind the club refusing to play is not entitled to a cent

Gray pitched a great game yesterday and had the visitors at his mercy

The Portlands play here to day and a brilliant game is expected

Notes

The Bangors have open dates next Monday and Tuesday the disbandment of the Worcesters having caused them It was intended to have the team play again in Rockland, but the Rocklands do not care to tackle our team again as they do not relish a repetition of the drubbing which they received

The team will probably take a rest with merely practice on Monday and Tuesday Wednesday and Thursday Brockton will play in this city and on Friday the Bangors play in Lewiston Saturday the Lewistons will be the opponents of the team here After next week the Bangors will be away eleven days

If we can only beat Portland to day the enthusiasts will be well satisfied with the recent series in this city As it is they have won five out of the last six which is a record to be proud of The Bangors play in Portland to-morrow

Flower Festival

Although the Maine State Floral Emblem Society is in its infancy, it has enrolled among its members some of the brightest and best known women of our State. Organized in a systematic manner, its various State, district and city officers have each been actively and persistently laboring in behalf of the society There has been a steady increase in membership throughout the State

In order to further interest the people of our State in a national flower, as well as in the wealth of flora all around us, but so little known, the society proposes to hold a flower festival in connection with the Maine State Fair. The management of the fair has kindly granted them one morning which will be occupied by a novel and unique programme. The festival will be fashioned after the Fete des Fleurs held annually at Nice and Paris. Carriages covered with gay flowers, barges and tally-ho coaches decked with thousands of bright blossoms bearing men, women and children artistically arranged, will be preceded by officers and speakers, likewise in floral barges.

The parade will move around the track headed by a band discoursing fine music, so that all present may have an opportunity to view this novel procession. The march will be followed by a battle with flowers, music, and ten minute speeches from the most interesting speakers in the State.

DON'T LET THEM DIE.

July Heat Weaken's Babies' Digestion.

No Strength to Resist Cholera Infantum.

Half the Funerals of July are of Little Ones.

Safety Lies in Lactated Food and Cleanliness.

The Proper Food is Very Far from Expensive.

July is dealing even more cruelly with the babies than a year ago.

The fatal cases of cholera infantum last week in this city were many, and there will be many more.

Precious little lives sacrificed to ignorance!

Almost every one might have been saved!

All these diarrheal diseases, whether cholera infantum, diarrhea or summer complaint, are preventable. Physicians emphatically say so.

Hot weather alone will not produce these disorders, it simply weakens the infant digestion, and makes it easy for improper feeding to bring on dreaded diarrhea.

What, then, is proper diet in July?

Healthy mother's milk has no rival, but when the child is being weaned, or when its natural food is thin and watery and unable to keep baby strong and well, lactated food must be used at once, either to supplement mother's milk or as a complete diet.

For years it has been noted that in countless homes and in the large children's institutions, wherever lactated food has been regularly used, there have been few or no returns of deaths from cholera infantum in July and August.

The reason is that this highly nutritious pre-digested and especially palatable food is the very next thing in every respect to pure mother's milk. It is easily assimilated by the infant stomach, with but a trifling expenditure of vitality. It keeps up the little one's strength, and as it cannot possibly contain a particle of impurity, these two great causes of cholera infantum are successfully avoided.

And babies like it.

Any food, however nutritious, that baby will not readily take, has small chances of doing good. And it is here that lactated food stands pre-eminent in the minds of medical men. When teething, and during hot weather, when babies are most capricious in their appetite it is found that they take lactated food with relish when nothing else will tempt them.

Members of boards of health and physicians it will be found, feed their own children on lactated food. The fact known to physicians from the start that lactated food was prepared under the personal supervision of no less a man than Prof. Boynton of Vermont university gave it immediate standing among practitioners.

When a change of diet is needed because baby is not taking sufficient nourishment lactated food is sure to delight mothers by the evident relish with which babies take it.

Telegraphic Notes

During debate on the anarchist bill in the French Chamber of Deputies, Wednesday, M. Jaures made a speech in which he taunted members of the government with having favored Panamaists. Then he alluded to the venality of the press which, he said, was deriving monthly subsidies from financial houses. The ministry was profiting thereby through a consequent muzzling of the venal press. Independent organs could not be silenced by bribes so an attempt was being made to silence them through this bill. He then accused M. Rouvier of having fostered corruption, but the President, M. Burdeau, intervened and warned M. Jaures that personalities would not be permitted. M. Rouvier sprang to his feet and exclaimed "I have fear of nothing, either from parliament or the law." A scene of great excitement ensued and when order was restored M. Deschanel, Union Republican, replied to M. Jaures. He blames the radicals and socialists for the prevailing moral and social disorder.

At the opening day of the Toledo meet of the National Ring contest, on the programme was the one mile open class B, in which L. D. Cabanne, of St. Louis, comparatively an unknown rider, gave Sanger a hard brush for the first place and defeated Bliss and Bald. The event resulted as Sanger, first, L. D. Cabanne, of St. Louis, second, J. P. Bliss, third. Time, 2 25 2 5.

The Doctors Endorse It

At a regular meeting of the Genesee county (N. Y.) Medical Society, the physicians of the county passed a vote of thanks for a quantity of Gilmore's Aromatic Wine which had been presented to the society, and said that they recognized the remedy as being adapted to a large class of diseases. Physicians everywhere recommend this excellent medicine, especially to their lady patients. Sold by C. Sweet, West Market Square.

A resident of a nearby suburb came to town recently to lay in a supply of Adamson's Cough Balsam. He did not need it then, but as he paid for it he said, he took prevention and kept the cure. It keeps until used.

THE PUZZLE SOLVED.

Perhaps no local disease has puzzled and baffled the medical profession more than nasal catarrh. While not immediately fatal it is among the most nauseous and disgusting ills the flesh is heir to, and the records show very few or no cases of radical cure of chronic catarrh by any of the many modes of treatment until the introduction of Ely's Cream Balm a few years ago. The success of this preparation has been most gratifying and surprising. No druggist is without it.

THE OYSTER AND THE DEMAGOGUE.

A jolly old Oyster of Blizzport Bay,
So happy and careless and free,
Sputtered 'round in the sand and kept singing away
As he sipped the sweet salt of the sea,
"Oh! talk as you please about princes and kings,
And teeter your knees to the flattered old things;
From the Queen to the Czar there is nary a one
Has half of my measure of pleasure and fun."

But a Demagogue, idling around there belike,
And aching to hear himself talk,
Said all to himself, "Now's the time for a strike;
I'll teach him 'the Delegate's Walk'"
So he answered aloud, "My good friend, you spent well,
Your remarks do you proud, they come fresh from the shell

But, and you forget your deplorable lot,
Why, man, it's a shame the rough cont you have got!
Deed the shells of the common clams on the shore
Are smoother and finer and bigger—what's more
You're abused, but your cause I will help all I can,
If you'll only stand up for your rights like a man."

That is all, for the rest of the story's so guessed,
The Oyster is out, and there's trouble about,
And somebody's busy, and somebody—well,
Some other Molluscan is filling his shell,

MORAL

The mouth of the Demagogue's always agape
To agitate, rant, eat and drink
Those only the fate of the Oyster escape
Who stop to consider and think
That raging all day against "riches and pelf"
Is only his way of enriching himself
Strife, clamor and claim, he will aid and abet,
For everything's game that comes into his net
And, gaining his purpose, he don't care a Ham
What haps to an Oyster of Muddle head Clam

CHAPTER XX
A LOVE LETTER

Two days after Bernardine had left Petershof the snows began to melt. Nothing could be drearier than that process nothing more desolate than the outlook.

The Disagreeable Man sat in his bedroom trying to read Carpenter's "Anatomy." It failed to hold him. Then he looked out of the window and listened to the dripping of the icicles. At last he took a pen and wrote as follows:

LITTLE COMRADE, LITTLE PLAYMATE—I could not believe that you were really going. When you first said that you would soon be leaving, I listened with unconcern because it did not seem possible that the time could come when we should not be together, that the days would come and go, and that I should not know how you were, whether you were better and more hopeful about your life and your work, or whether the old misery of indifference and ill health was still clinging to you, whether your voice was strong as of one who had slept well and felt refreshed, or whether it was weak like that of one who had watched through the long night.

It did not seem possible that such a time could come. Many cruel things have happened to me as to scores of others but this is the most cruel of all. Against my wish and against my knowledge you have crept into my life as a necessity, and now I have to give you up. You are better. God bless you and you go back to a fuller life and to carry on your work, and to put to account those talents which no one [illegible] more than I do and as for myself, God help me, I am left to wither away.

You little one, you dear little one, I never wished to love you. I had never loved any one, never drawn near to any one. I have lived lonely all my young life for I am only a young man yet. I said to myself time after time I will not love her. It will not do me any good, nor her any good. And then in my state of health what right had I to think of marriage and making a home for myself? Of course that was out of the question. And then I thought that because I was a doomed man, cut off from the pleasures which make a lovely thing of life, it did not follow that I might not love you in my own quiet way, hugging my secret to myself until the love became all the greater because it was my secret. I reasoned about it too. It could not harm you had I loved you. No one could be the worse for being loved. So little by little I yielded myself this luxury, and my heart once so dried up, began to flower again. Yes little one, you will smile when I tell you that my heart broke out into flower.

When I think of it all now I am not sorry that I let myself go. At least I have learned what I knew nothing of before. Now I understand what people mean when they say that love adds a dignity to life which nothing else can give. That dignity is mine now, nothing can take it from me. It is my own. You are my very own. I love everything about you, from the beginning I recognized that you were clever and capable, though I often made fun of what you said that was simply a way I had and when I saw you did not mind I continued in that way, hoping always to vex you. Your good temper provoked me because I knew that you made allowances for me being a Petershof invalid. You would never have suffered a strong man to criticise you as I did, you would have flown at him for you are a feverish little child, not a quiet, woolly lamb.

At first I was wild that you should make allowances for me. And then I gave in, as weak men are obliged. When you came, I saw that your troubles and sufferings would make you bitter. Do you know who helped to cure you? It was I. I have seen that often before. That is the one little bit of good I have done in the world—I have helped to cure cynicism. You were shocked at the things I said and you were saved. I did not save you intentionally, so I am not posing as a philanthropist; I merely mention that you came here hard and you went back tender. That was partly because you have lived in the City of Suffering. Some people live there and learn nothing but you would learn to feel only too much. I wish that your capacity for feeling were less but then you would not be yourself, your presence self I mean, for you have changed even since I have known you. Every week you seemed to become more gentle. You thought me rough and gruff as putting little comrade I meant to be so. If you had only known there was a whole world of tenderness for you in my heart I could not trust myself to be tender to you—you would have guessed my secret. And I wanted you to go away undisturbed. You do not feel things lightly, and it was best for you that you should harden your heart against me.

If you could harden your heart against me! But I am not sure about that. I believe that—ah well I'm a foolish fellow but some day dear I'll tell you what I think. I have treasured many of your sayings in my memory. I can never be as though I had never known you. Many of your words I have repeated to myself afterward until they seemed to represent my own thoughts. I specially remember what you said about God having made us lonely so that we might be obliged to turn to him, for we are all lonely, though some of us not quite so much as others. You yourself spoke often of being lonely. Oh, my own little one! Your loneliness is nothing compared to mine. How often I could have told you that!

I have never seen any of your work, but I think you have now something to say to others, and that you will say it well. And if you have the courage to be simple when it comes to the point you will succeed. And I believe you will have the courage, I believe everything of you.

But whatever you do or do not you will always be the same to me—my own little one, my very own. I have been waiting all my life for you, and I have given you my heart entire. If you only knew that, you could not call yourself lonely any more. If any one was ever loved, it is you, dear heart.

Do you remember how those peasants at the Gasthaus thought we were betrothed? I thought that might annoy you, and though I was relieved at the time, still, later on, I wished you had been annoyed. That would have shown that you were not indifferent. From that time my love for you grew apace. You must not mind me telling you so often. I must go on telling you. Just think, dear, this is the first love letter I have ever written, and every word of love is a whole world of love. I shall never call my life a failure now. I may have failed in everything else, but not in loving. Oh, little one, it can't be that I am not to be with you and not to have you for my own! And yet how can that be? It is not I who may hold you in my arms. Some strong man must love and wrap you round with tenderness and softness. You little independent child, in spite of all your wonderful views and theories, you will soon be glad to lean on some one for comfort and sympathy. And then perhaps that troubled little spirit of yours may find its rest. Would to God I were that strong man!

"But because I love you, my own little darling, I will not spoil your life. I won't ask you to give me even one thought. But if I believed that it were of any good to say a prayer I should pray that you may soon find that strong man, for it is not well for any of us to stand alone. There comes a time when the loneliness is more than we can bear.

There is one thing I want you to know. Indeed I am not the gruff fellow I have so often seemed. Do believe that. Do you remember how I told you that I dreamed of losing you? And now the dream has come true. I am always looking for you and cannot find you.

You have been very good to me, so patient and genial and frank. No one before has ever been so good. Even if I did not love you I should say that.

But I do love you. No one can take that from me. It is my own dignity, the crown of my life. Such a poor life—no, no, I won't say that now. I cannot pity myself now—no, I cannot.

The Disagreeable Man stopped writing and the pen dropped on the table.

He buried his tear stained face in his hands. He cried his heart out, this Disagreeable Man.

Then he took the letter which he had just been writing and he tore it into fragments.

CHAPTER XXI
THE DUSTING OF THE BOOKS

It was now more than three weeks since Bernardine's return to London. She had gone back to her old home at her uncle's secondhand bookshop. She spent her time in dusting the books and arranging them in some kind of order for old Zerviah Holme had ceased to interest himself much in his belongings and sat in the little inner room reading as usual Gibbon's "History of Rome." Customers might please themselves about coming. Zerviah Holme had never cared about amassing money, and now he cared even less than before. A frugal breakfast, a frugal dinner, a box full of snuff and a shelf full of Gibbon were the old man's only requirements, an undemanding life and therefore a loveless one, since the less we ask for the less we get.

When Malvina, his wife, died, people said, "He will miss her."

But he did not seem to miss her. He took his breakfast, his pinch of snuff, his Gibbon in precisely the same way as before and in the same quantities.

When Bernardine first fell ill people said, "He will be sorry. He is fond of her in his own queer way."

But he did not seem to be sorry. He did not understand anything about illness. The thought of it worried him, so he put it from him. He remembered vaguely that Bernardine's father had suddenly become ill, that his powers had all failed him, and that he lingered on just a week of humanity and then died. That was 30 years ago. Then he thought of Bernardine and said to himself, "History repeats itself." That was all.

Unkind? No, for when it was told him that she must go away he looked at her wonderingly and then went out. It was very rarely that he went out. He came back with £50.

"When that is done," he told her, "I can find more."

When she went away people said, "He will be lonely."

But he did not seem to be lonely. They asked him once, and he said, "I always have Gibbon."

And when she came back they said, "He will be glad."

But her return seemed to make no difference to him.

He looked at her in his usual sightless manner and asked her what she intended to do.

"I shall dust the books," she said.

"Ah, I dare say they want it," he remarked.

"I shall get a little teaching to do," she continued. "And I shall take care of you."

"Ah," he said vaguely. He did not understand what she meant. She had never been very near to him and he had never been very near to her. He had taken but little notice of her comings and goings. She had either never tried to win his interest or had failed probably the latter. Now she was going to take care of him.

This was the home to which Bernardine had returned. She came back with many resolutions to help to make his old age bright. She looked back now and saw how little she had given of herself to her aunt and her uncle. Aunt Malvina was dead and Bernardine did not regret her. Uncle Zerviah was here still. She would be tender with him and win his affection. She thought she could not begin better than by looking after his books. Each one was dusted carefully. The dingy old shop was restored to cleanliness. Bernardine became interested in her task. "I will work up the business," she thought. She did not care in the least about the books, she never looked into them except to clean them but she was thankful to have the occupation at hand, something to help her over a difficult time, for the most trying part of an illness is when we are ill no longer, when there is no excuse for being idle and listless when in fact we could work if we would. Then is the moment for us to begin on anything which presents itself until we have the courage and the inclination to go back to our own particular work, that which we have longed to do and about which we now care nothing.

So Bernardine dusted books and sometimes sold them. All the time she thought of the Disagreeable Man. She missed him in her life. She had never loved before, and she loved him. The forlorn figure rose before her, and her eyes filled with tears. Sometimes the tears fell on the books and spotted them.

Still, on the whole she was bright but she found things difficult. She had lost her old enthusiasms, and nothing yet had taken their place. She went back to the circle of her acquaintances and found that she had slipped away from touch with them. While she had been ill they had been busily at work on matters social and educational and political. She thought them hard; the women especially; they thought her weak. They were disappointed in her. She was now looking for the more human qualities in them, and she was disappointed.

"You have changed," they said to her, "but then, of course, you have been ill, haven't you?"

With these strong active people to be ill and useless is a reproach, and Bernardine felt it as such. But she had changed and she herself perceived it in many ways. It was not that she was necessarily better but that she was different, probably more human and probably less self confident. She had lived in a world of books and she had burst through that bondage and come out into a wider and a freer land.

New sorts of interest came into her life. What she had lost in strength she had gained in tenderness. Her very manner was gentler, her mode of speech was less assertive. At least this was the criticism of those who had liked her but little before her illness.

"She has learned," they said among themselves. And they were not scholars. They knew.

These, two or three of them, drew her nearer to them. She was alone there with the old man and, though better, needed care. They mothered her as well as they could, at first timidly, and then with that sweet despotism which is for us all an easy yoke to bear. They were drawn to her as they had never been drawn before. They felt that she was no longer analyzing them, weighing them in her intellectual balance and finding them wanting. So they were free with her now and revealed to her qualities at which she had never guessed before.

As the days went on Zerviah began to notice that things were somehow different. He found some flowers near his table. He was reading about Nero at the time, but he put aside his Gibbon and fondled the flowers instead. Bernardine did not know that.

One morning when she was out he went into the shop and saw a great change there. Some one had been busy at work. The old man was pleased. He loved his books, though of late he had neglected them.

"She never used to take any interest in them," he said to himself. "I wonder why she does now?"

He began to count upon seeing her. When she came back from her outings, he was glad. But she did not know. If he had given any sign of welcome to her during those first difficult days, it would have been a great encouragement to her.

He watched her feeding the sparrows. One day when she was not there he went and did the same. Another day when she had forgotten he surprised her by reminding her.

"You have forgotten to feed the sparrows," he said. "They must be quite hungry."

That seemed to break the ice a little. The next morning when she was arranging some books in the old shop he came in and watched her.

"It is a comfort to have you," he said. That was all he said, but Bernardine flushed with pleasure.

"I wish I had been more to you all these years," she said gently.

He did not quite take that in and returned hastily to Gibbon.

Then they began to stroll out together. They had nothing to talk about. He was not interested in the outside world, and she was not interested in Roman history. But they were trying to get nearer to each other. They had lived years together, but they had never advanced a step. Now they were trying, she consciously, he unconsciously. But it was a slow process and pathetic, as everything human is.

"If we could only find some subject which we both liked," Bernardine thought to herself. "That might knit us together."

Well, they found a subject, though perhaps it was an unlikely one. The cart horses, those great strong patient toilers of the road attracted their attention and after that no walk was without its pleasure or interest. The brewers horses were the favorites, though there were others, too, which met with their approval. He began to know and recognize them. He was almost like a child. In his new found interest on Whit Monday they both went to the cart horse parade in Regent's park. They talked about the enjoyment for days afterward.

"Next year," he told her, "we must subscribe to the fund even if we have to sell a book."

He did not like to sell his books. He parted with them painfully as some people part with their illusions.

Bernardine bought a paper for herself every day but one evening she came in without one. She had been seeing after some teaching and had without any difficulty succeeded in getting some temporary light work at one of the high schools. She forgot about her newspaper.

The old man noticed this. He put on his shabby felt hat and went down the street and brought in a copy of The Daily News.

"I don't remember what you like, but will this do?" he asked.

He was quite proud of himself for showing her this attention, almost as proud as the Disagreeable Man when he did something kind and thoughtful.

Bernardine thought of him, and the tears came into her eyes at once. When did she not think of him? When she glanced at the front sheet and in the death column her eye rested on his name, and she read that Robert Allitsen's math [illegible] had passed away. So the Disagreeable Man had won his freedom at last. His words echoed back to her:

"But I know how to wait. If I have not learned anything else I have learned how to wait and some day I shall be free and then"—

DOWN THE PENOBSCOT

A Pleasure Trip to Islesboro by the Sea

[Correspondence of Whig and Courier.]

Down the Penobscot Saturday. Our destination, "The Islesborough," of course. Had we not carried vivid recollections of the bountiful table of seasonable dainties, not to say anything of appetizing air after the heat of our dear Queen City? She is a queen with an incomparable throne of hills, but undeniably the weather had been hot. As we swung out from the wharf we caught the northerly breeze and soon its effect on our tired nerves set us dreaming as we sped down past mills and ice houses which line the river's banks, till we only look at it as a machine and for traffic. Very soon we catch a bit of nature unadorned, the bold shores glisten in the sunlight, the trees wave their graceful branches to us with a gentle welcome, and the leaves flutter and rustle with a music all their own—unless we shut out ours to the bustle of humanity and hear only the stories the leaves tell.

As we glide along the river tells us many tales of years ago, when the traditions had been of the men and women who first came to this beautiful river to found new homes, of the home making in this wilderness of this sterling people, of the enterprise which had sent such pioneers into the unknown forests, of the energy which had utilized this magnificent region with its abundant water power for the uses of mankind, of the hardships and loneliness, the weary bodies and aching hearts because of the separation from old associations and friends, the sundering of social ties, the deprivation of cultured bodies and brains. While we have been listening to these reminiscences we have moved on past the picturesque banks of Hampden, with its bold shores and protruding points, its famous battlefield of eighty years renown, past Orrington, dear old town celebrated for its good citizens and beauty. This too has an historic interest in connection with the event which created the battlefield at Hampden. For plain in sight stands the old colonial house—with its wings on either side—giving it an all at home look—through which a cannon ball passed—thrown from a gun on the English ship, which was passing up the river, and killed a man on the opposite side of this house. These peaceful cultivated lands sloping toward us and resting so quietly this morning would not suggest a thought of the toil and moil which created them to a stranger. But the leaves rustle on and as we come in sight of the Beaver's dam, which makes out by Pine Point, they relate this unique old story of the old farm to which this bit of land belongs. Doubtless not one of the gay revellers who have frequented this sheltered little club house has ever been told it. They could not listen to the leaves, you know, even during the most enchanting moonlight stroll or under the quiet star dotted canopy.

Years ago when this world was new and the river was the road, there came a gallant sea captain with his family to this beautiful spot. Here he built his house as strong as oak beams hewn with a broad axe, could frame it. Truly beautiful for situation it was. These old settlers saw at once the fine exposure to the southern sun, and the point where the graceful curves of the river could satisfy the sweep of one's eyes. Here he brought his treasures wife and children and here he claimed for the world the best of nature's gifts.

But during all these years, while these broad oceans of forest were being settled, when all the luxuries of life were to be brought from the dear old home in Plymouth, by sailing vessels, while the sturdy sons and gentle daughters were just "troublesome comforts," what must have been the loneliness of that wife's, that mother's heart! All associations, all culture, all friends left behind.

During the first years spent there, the captain established a line of packets to run between his wharf at the Beaver's Dam and old Plymouth and Boston, and many were the passengers who availed themselves of the "accommodations" of the crafts to pass to and from those ports. One beautiful September, when the captain himself was shut into France by the embargo, and his wife with her family and servers, if not servants, were managing the farm, the store, and the packets, she was so oppressed with care and home-sickness that she felt she must put her little family on to the next packet that sailed for Plymouth, or have some of her relatives come to her. But she could not abandon this home and her sisters had given up hope of being able to come to her.

She was lying sleepless and gazing into the bright moonlight one night, when she heard the familiar tones of the old black steward's violin come stealing up to her chamber window from the water. She listened a moment. "The packet must have come in. Why did I not hear the anchor drop? Something fearful has happened," she thought. "No! What is that violin saying?"

"Missus Bartlett, Missus Bartlett, your sisters have come!

"Missus Bartlett, Missus Bartlett, your sisters have come! over and over again, came up the hill and over the trees to her strained ear, so plainly the sounds told her just that fact.

She sprang from her bed and into slippers and dress, and was out of the door and half way across the garden, to fall half fainting with joy into her two sisters' arms. They, headed by the faithful old black, had landed as quietly as possible from the little vessel, but fearing to announce themselves too suddenly, had accepted the steward's volunteered services. Doubtless she never heard sweeter music drawn by the fiddle bow.

Down past Brewster rock, named probably, for some of "Missus Bartlett's" relatives, for her Puritan blood was direct from Brewsters, Sampsons and Taylors—and out into the broader waters, where the stories of the leaves became more indistinct and where fitful murmurs of the traditions of Fort Knox, old Fort Pownal, now called Fort Point, reaches us and at dear old Castine, spite of its rich history, we ceased to dream and went fast to sleep, lulled by the somnolent breeze from its slopes, to wake at the brisk landing at Islesborough.

After such a dinner at the hotel as can be obtained at no other hotel on the coast, we spent the hours in wondering why we had been so foolish as to remain in the heat at Bangor, when all this comfort could be had by dreaming down the river.

That blessed institution of the Bar Harbor line, the Saturday night boat, brought so large an addition to the guests of the house that [illegible] trouble, we began to fear for our next day's dinner. But the excellent manager and his efficient cooks set us such a meal on Sunday as did them honor and changed our fears of insufficiency to fears as to the amount we were able to dispose of. Indeed we did see people eat till we wondered if the house afforded the requisites the old Puritans provided for the feast [illegible].

Sunday quite a number attended service at the [illegible] church on the hill and others rode to Dark Harbor to the Episcopal chapel in its ideal location, the members of that church sending out most cordial invitations to all who could attend. After 25 Years

About twenty five years ago I was afflicted with a disease which the doctors pronounced SCROFULA. I was treated by several physicians and specialists without being benefited, and I tried many blood remedies, without relief. S.S.S. was recommended, and after taking six bottles I am now well. My skin is perfectly clear, and I would not be in my former condition for two thousand dollars.
